

Maintaining Columbia's Ties to Israel

As members of the faculty of Columbia University, we write to express our commitment to the university's ties with Israel. Israel is a thriving democracy. It has democratic elections, a free press, rule of law, and strong protections for the individual rights of all citizens, including Arabs as well as Jews. Israel also is the home of great universities, a vibrant culture, and an innovative high-tech sector. Given these shared values and interests, Columbia benefits from ties with Israeli faculty, students, research, and technology.

For nearly seven decades, Israel has faced hostile neighbors. Rocket attacks, terrorism in the streets, chaos across the border, and the trauma of war are facts of life for Israelis. We wish for a peaceful and just resolution of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, just as Israelis do. We appreciate that several Israeli Prime Ministers from across the Israeli political spectrum have endorsed a two-state solution. We recognize that Israel withdrew unilaterally from Gaza, and that Gaza has since become a base for attacks on Israeli civilians. We do not mean to suggest that we agree with every policy of the Israeli government, just as the Israeli people have a range of views about the best path to a peaceful and secure coexistence with their neighbors.

Yet it would not be just or principled to respond to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict by disengaging from Israel or from companies that do business with Israel. It would be unjust to blame only one side for this conflict, and unprincipled to single out Israel for this sanction, while maintaining ties with other nations that – unlike Israel – are undemocratic, repressive, and much less restrained in their use of force.

For all these reasons, Columbia's ties with Israel need to be preserved. While we recognize that the University Trustees are responsible for deciding whether to divest from companies that do business in Israel, we write to express our support for these investments.

Sincerely,
